

TATLER

JANUARY

YOUR PERFECT FUTURE
TATLER'S
HOROSCOPES
FOR 2017

NEW DENIM RULES

ELENA
PERMINOVA
ON MARRIAGE
& MOTHERHOOD

BREAKING NEWS
Yes, you say to
The Tatler g
to snobb

KIDNAP
WHAT TO S
WHO TO CA
HOW TO ESC

SU
WATERHOU
IN THE BAT
With her girlfrie

HELLO, SEXY

LILY ALDRIDGE IN DIAMONDS. COLD SHOWER, ANYONE?

 But 'lounge' is still forbidden.
Unless you are in an airport*

l'ueri

lavish multigenerational birthday weekend in Marrakesh, awash with tall, skinny blondes and boys with Abercrombie & Fitch bodies. But who is the pint-sized brunette with the divine Audrey Tautou bob and the slight cast in her eye? The one killing it on the dancefloor in goat-hair slippers bought that day in the souk and with a white rose tucked behind her ear?

Let me present Gigi Ettegui, 23, daughter of Joseph – the Moroccan-born fashion-retail legend who changed the way London shopped, ate, lived and dressed in the late 20th century – and his widow, Isabel, the genius behind the recently revived luxury-leather label Connolly. In other words, genes will out, duh, but still. As us grown-ups watching from the sidelines wistfully murmured amongst ourselves: it's amazing that proper old-school cool like this still exists.

If you are as old as me, you will remember Joseph from the early Seventies, when he had a shop under his hairdressing salon on the King's Road selling sweaters by this fabulous Japanese person called Kenzo. That was the era that was, of Kenzo, Jean-Charles de Castelbajac and Emmanuelle Khanh (remember her signature lunettes? How it all comes rushing back). Unknowns such as Katharine Hamnett, Azzedine Alaïa, and Margaret Howell – he introduced us to them in the Eighties.

And then came his own line of knitwear, Joseph Tricot – what a trope of the late Eighties/early Nineties was the thick-rib Sloppy Joe with leggings, and what about those signature low-cut, narrow-legged black trousers that fit so well that you (well, I) bought five pairs? Joseph, my callow millennials, was the be-all-and-end-all of cool back then; Brompton Cross, where he opened his first multibrand boutique with Joe's Café

DRESS &
HEADSCARF
BY THIERRY
COLSON

GIGI ETTEGUI WEARS TOP BY
THIERRY COLSON

TATLER.COM | TATLER JANUARY 2011

Luori